

YOUR AD HERE »

Colorado rafting company sues federal government over minimum-pay rule for guides

Arkansas Valley Adventure and Colorado River Outfitters Association argue Biden, Department of Labor, cannot force minimum pay for permitted operations. They say the new rule could end overnight trips.

News FOLLOW NEWS | December 17, 2021

Jason Blevins
The Colorado Sun

Colorado's rafting industry, typically pretty sleepy this time of year, sparked to life this week after a longtime outfitter sued President Joe Biden and the Department of Labor over a new rule spiking the minimum wage for federal contractors to $15 an hour.

"This is not about minimum wage. We already pay our guides way above $15 an hour. What's really at stake here is the overnight rafting trip. We are just not going to be able to comply," said Duke Bradford, the owner of Arkansas Valley Adventure, who joined the Colorado River Outfitters Association in suing the federal government in Colorado's U.S. District Court over a rule that Bradford said would raise the cost of rafting across the country. "I want to offer trips that everyone can afford. If I jack up prices to pay these wages, it would be trips for only the wealthy."

Some outfitters rallied to support Bradford and CROA, which represents 50 of the state's rafting companies. Some guides blasted Bradford, arguing he was fighting against increased pay for workers who serve as the backbone for that state's $150 million rafting industry.

"It's become harder and harder to make a living doing this," said 25-year guide Antony McCoy with Timberline Tours. "The only reason I've managed to make it is because our owner does pay us relatively well. But the majority of guides, they are paid very poor rates. But if everyone raises their pay and all companies raise their rates, then everyone would do better."

Read the full story via The Colorado Sun.

The Colorado Sun is a reader-supported news organization dedicated to covering the people, places and policies that matter in Colorado. Read more, sign up for free newsletters and subscribe at coloradosun.com.

Support Local Journalism

DONATE

